Part 1 — The 10-Step Call Flow

This is the standard flow used on residential telecom/cable accounts (the kind of structure QA teams score against on AT&T, Comcast, or Horizon-style campaigns). Each step includes what to do and what a Quality Analyst is actually listening for.

- Greeting & Branding
Answer within SLA (usually 3 rings). Greet with energy, state company name, your name, and offer help. This is the customer's first impression of the whole brand.
QA checks: correct greeting script, energy in tone, company name stated, no dead air.
- Account Verification
Confirm you are speaking to the account holder. Ask for 2-3 verification points (name, account number or phone number, and address or date of birth) before discussing any account details.
QA checks: verification completed BEFORE sharing account info; correct data points used; compliance/security policy followed.
- Reason for the Call (Probing)
Ask an open question to let the customer explain. Then ask 1-2 clarifying questions to fully understand the issue before jumping to a solution.
QA checks: active listening, no interrupting, relevant probing questions asked.
- Empathy Statement
If the customer is upset or the issue caused inconvenience, acknowledge the emotion before moving to the solution. This step is mandatory on any billing or service complaint.
QA checks: empathy used naturally (not robotic), matches the customer's emotion level.
- Hold Procedure (if needed)
Ask permission before placing the customer on hold. State the reason and the expected time. Thank the customer when you return.
QA checks: permission asked, reason given, hold time within limit, thanked on return.

6 Resolution / Solution

Explain the solution in simple, clear steps. Avoid technical jargon. Confirm the customer understands before moving on.

QA checks: correct solution offered, clear explanation, customer understanding confirmed.

7 Confirm & Recap

Summarize what was discussed and what will happen next (dates, amounts, next steps). This avoids repeat calls and builds trust.

QA checks: recap given, accurate details, no missed steps.

8 Cross-check for Anything Else

Ask if there is anything else you can help with. This step often reveals a second issue the customer almost forgot to mention.

QA checks: open-ended closing question asked (not just 'anything else?' rushed).

9 Soft Offer (Upsell/Cross-sell, if applicable)

Only if the call was positive and it fits naturally: mention a relevant plan, bundle, or service upgrade. Never force it on an unresolved or angry call.

QA checks: offer relevant, timed appropriately, no pressure tactics.

10 Closing & Farewell

Thank the customer for their time, restate your name for reference, and close warmly. End on a positive tone regardless of how the call started.

QA checks: proper closing script, positive tone, call ended courteously.

Part 2 — Full Example Role Plays

Two complete, realistic call scripts showing the flow in action, including empathy statements, verification, hold procedure, and closing. Practise these out loud, then try them with a partner.

Role Play 1 — Billing Dispute (Overcharge on Cable Bill)

Scenario: Customer is angry about a $45 charge they don't recognize on their cable and internet bill. Account type: Residential Triple-Play (TV, Internet, Phone).

Agent: Thank you for calling, this is Ahmed speaking, how can I help you today?

Customer: I'm SO annoyed right now! There's a $45 charge on my bill I never agreed to!

Agent: I completely understand why that's frustrating, and I'm sorry for the stress this has caused. Before we look into it together, can I please confirm your full name and the account number or phone number on file?

Customer: It's Michael Turner, account number 8842910.

Agent: Thank you, Michael. And can you also confirm the address on the account, just to fully verify?

Customer: 221 Baker Street.

Agent: Perfect, thank you for your patience with that. Now let's look at this charge together — can you tell me the exact date it appeared on your bill?

Customer: It's on the bill dated the 14th. I never ordered anything extra!

Agent: I hear you, and I'd feel the same way seeing an unexpected charge. Let me check your account now — would it be okay if I place you on a brief hold for about a minute while I review the billing history?

Customer: Fine, but please hurry.

Agent: Thank you for waiting, Michael. I really appreciate your patience. I can see the charge — it was a one-time premium channel activation from a promotional trial that auto-converted to paid. I completely understand why this felt unexpected, and I'm sorry it wasn't made clearer to you.

Customer: So can you remove it or not?

Agent: Yes, I can. I'm processing a full credit of $45 to your account right now — you'll see it reflected within 1-2 billing cycles. I'm also cancelling the trial channel so this doesn't happen again.

Customer: Okay... thank you, I appreciate that.

Agent: Of course. Just to recap: a $45 credit is on its way, and the trial channel is now cancelled. Is there anything else I can help you with today?

Customer: No, that's all.

Agent: Thank you so much for your patience today, Michael, and I'm sorry again for the confusion. Have a wonderful day!

Role Play 2 — Service Outage Complaint (No Internet Connection)

Scenario: Customer has had no internet for 2 days and works from home. Account type: Internet-only, Business-from-home plan.

Agent: Good afternoon, thank you for calling, this is Ahmed, how can I assist you?

Customer: I've had NO internet for two days! I work from home, this is unacceptable!

Agent: I'm really sorry to hear that, and I can only imagine how stressful that's been, especially with work depending on it. Let's get this fixed right away — can I confirm your name and account number first?

Customer: Sarah Cohen, account 5591023.

Agent: Thank you, Sarah. Let me pull up your account now. Can you tell me exactly when the connection stopped working?

Customer: Since Tuesday morning. I've restarted the router a hundred times!

Agent: I appreciate you trying that already — that helps me a lot. I'm sorry this has gone on for two days without a fix; that's not the experience we want for you. Give me a moment to check for any outages in your area — would you mind holding for about a minute?

Customer: Go ahead.

Agent: Thank you for holding, Sarah. I found the issue — there's a confirmed outage affecting your area due to maintenance work, and our technical team is already on site. I'm sorry this wasn't communicated to you sooner.

Customer: So when will it be fixed?!

Agent: Based on the latest update, service should be fully restored within the next 3 hours. I'm also going to apply a service credit to your account for the two days of disruption, since I know how important this is for your work.

Customer: Okay, I guess that helps. Thank you.

Agent: You're very welcome, and thank you for your patience through this. To recap: service should be back within 3 hours, and a credit for 2 days is being applied to your next bill. Is there anything else I can do for you?

Customer: No, that's everything.

Agent: Thank you again for your patience today, Sarah. I'm sorry for the inconvenience, and I hope the rest of your day gets better!

Practice tip: read the Customer lines out loud with real frustration, then answer as the Agent. Recording yourself and listening back is one of the fastest ways to improve your tone.
